Durham Children's Groundwater Festival

Making Environmental Education Fun!

Water is at the very heart of our everyday lives and for 13 years we have worked together to bring its value into perspective. It is vulnerable because of us, it sustains us and the landscape around us, it is recycled through a very complex ecosystem and it has the power to erode and flood our cities and towns. We need to stand in awe of its existence!

Over the past 13 years, more than 51,000 students across Durham Region, their teachers and parent volunteers have experienced, with all of their senses, water and how we use it, everyday. We started out small with just 350 students in 1998, but we are now at capacity, engaging over 4,000 grade 4 students and more than 500 high-school volunteers each year.

The Durham Children's Groundwater Festival is about tradition. It is supported by multi-levels of government helping to establish a water ethic in tomorrow's constituents. This event would not be possible without our many partners and stakeholders who each year, provide significant financial and in-kind contributions to deliver this festival. We could not have done the festival this year or for the past 13 years without their continued support.

Thank You
